This book (an updated and extended edition) is about mobilizing women and health care policy makers and providers to unite their efforts in a single strategy for fighting cervical cancer worldwide. The objective of this strategy would be to reverse cervical cancer prevalence and mortality rates among all 2.4 billion women at risk and to achieve this goal within 10-15 years of implementation. Cervical Cancer Screening (Pap test, VIA, VILI, or HPV) failed to stop cervical cancer worldwide simply because many countries could not afford developing infrastructure necessary to carry on the global strategy, and because the outreach could not accomplish the targeted 51% of the population at risk. In 2015, there is still 600,000 women getting cervical cancer annually and 300,000 of them die. Every minute one woman gets cervical cancer and every 2 minutes one woman dies from this preventable disease. In 21st Century the Information Technology (IT) Revolution has made substantial impact on medicine enabling remote points-of care, scattered around the world, to be e-connected with experts in distant medical centers and to obtain quality diagnosis and proper guidelines for curative therapy of early stages of cervical cancer. Low frequency of costly interventions needed makes IT-based screening financially and socially beneficial for mass screening.

A Review of the HHS Family Planning Program provides a broad evaluation of the Title X family planning program since its establishment in 1970. The program successfully provides family planning services to its target audience of low-income individuals, but there is room for improvement. While the program's core goals are apparent, a secondary set of changing priorities has emerged without a clear, evidence-based strategic process. Also, funding for the program has increased in actual dollars, but has not kept pace with inflation or increased costs. Several aspects of the program's structure could be improved to increase the ability of Title X to meet the needs of its target population. At the same time, the extent to which the program meets those needs cannot be assessed without a greater capacity for long-term data collection. A Review of the HHS Family Planning Program recommends several specific steps to enhance the management and improve the quality of the program, as well as to demonstrate its direct contribution to important end results, such as reducing rates of unintended pregnancy, cervical cancer, and infertility. The book will guide the Office of Family Planning toward improving the effectiveness of the program. Other parties who will find the research and recommendations valuable include programs receiving Title X funding from the Office of Family Planning, policy makers, researchers, and professional organizations.

Cervical cancer was once the leading cause of death for women in the United States according to Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC, 2006). During the past four decades, incidence and mortality have declined significantly, primarily because of the utilization of the Papanicolaou (Pap) test to detect cervical abnormalities. Evidence-based research led to clinical practice guidelines established by the ACS and ACOG in 2003 for screening of cervical cancer. This study utilized a retrospective chart review to describe adherence by nurse practitioners and physicians to cervical cancer screening guidelines as established in 2003 by the ACS and ACOG. Two hundred patient charts stratified by practitioner type were audited using convenience sampling. One hundred seventy three (86.5%; 95% CI = 80.3% to 90.7%) documented education related to prevention of HPV infection, 131 (65.5%) documented education related to safe sex practices, and 154 (76.7%) documented recommendation for an annual Pap smear. There were no significant differences between the two types of providers in their documentation. The results indicated the need for improvement in documentation.
